Tom Piccirilli's "The Last Kind Words" was a great read. This was my first novel by Piccirilli. The novel is more of a story/character driven type than an action/thriller one. The main character is Terrier Rand. He is not the overt hero type, he doesn't do crusades or wander around the country defending the meek.

"Tom Piccirilli's The Last Kind Words is a story born of the dark legacies of family violence and loss. With vivid prose and palpable urgency, it succeeds utterly as a crime tale. At the same time, it reminds us that crimes can emanate from both the darkest and lightest of places...."

The Last Kind Words Tom Piccirilli Review by Deb Donovan, June 2012. In his latest gripping crime novel—the first in a series—Tom Piccirilli introduces the Rands, a family of small-time thieves and card sharps who frequently run up against the law but are seldom prosecuted.... and who seldom resort to violence. Until five years before the...

Without further ado, find below a review of Tom Piccirilli's The Last Kind Words: Tom Piccirilli is a writer who understands the angles of crime noir. I don't just mean innovation, an original spin on crime families or bank heists. I mean the shapes of deception, the math behind the form, the way acts like theft and murder can be traced ...

"The last kind words ever spoken to Jesus were spoken by a thief." Normally, I'd start off with some kind of hook, a generalized statement that ties into my feelings about the book being reviewed. Summary. A well reasoned list of pro's and con's. Professional and clean, if a bit self-conscious at times.
